and another on Light Stations and the Life Saving Service of New Jersey. Arcadia Press as part of their Images of America series publishes all five volumes. The books of the series follow the same format, 128 pages, sepia cover photo, usually two black and white photos to a page and limited text. Still, the book is a delightful collection of old drawings and photos, many never published before.

The book is available from Kenrick Claflin and Son, 30 Hudson St., Northborough, MA 01532 for $19.95 plus $4.00 shipping and handling.

LIGHTHOUSE - Point Pinos, Pacific Grove, California

By Jerry McCaffery

The best word to describe this new lighthouse book is "comprehensive." Author Jerry McCaffery, who has been a docent at the Point Pinos Lighthouse for a number of years, really did his research before writing this book.

Early on, he weaves the history of this second lighthouse to be lighted on the west coast with others in California and other areas of the country to explain architecture and the elements of a lighthouse. Like most books on the subject, he unnecessarily delves into the administration of our country's aids to navigation, lantern rooms and optic developments. If this repetitious material was necessary in this recent release, it should have been condensed. However, that said, it is a meaty book and often explores areas not usually covered in other lighthouse histories. As an example, the tale of the government acquiring the land at Point Pinos is a tangled web worth telling.

In addition to the usual explanation of constructing the lighthouse, author McCaffery accurately, and in detail, tells the stories of the three principal keepers at Point Pinos: Charlotte Layton, the first keeper, Allen Luce (1872-1893) and Emily Fish (1892-1914). Sidebars featuring several entries from the original keeper's logs, highlight the sections on Keepers Luce and Fish. These vignettes provide a nice touch of color as the chapters pass by.

The book contains considerable information on shipwrecks, which took place in the area, most accompanied by photos. There are also some interesting and informative appendices regarding the various character notes, sources and even a copy of the engineering specifications for the construction of the first eight west coast lighthouses of which Point Pinos was one.

The book contains 124 black and white photos, 65 of archival quality. The photos could use hairline boxes (outlines) to make them crisper. Several modern photos are too small and don't read very well or are irrelevant to the story at hand.

Save a few design changes and a few minor negative comments, the book is very meaty and an excellent source for information on the oldest west coast lighthouse in continuous operation, with its original 3rd order lens.

Soft color cover, 8 1/2" by 11", 106 pages, 124 photos. Available at $15.95 by writing: Jerry McCaffery, 56 Spray St., Pacific Grove, CA 93950.
